Important information about refrigerants in air conditioners

The import of the refrigerant R12 is not permitted in Germany. If there is an air conditioning system that is filled with R12, it must be removed and disposed at a charge. The refrigerant R134a is permitted for private imports, but for professional importers it must also be disposed of by an approved specialist company.

The removal of refrigerants is only possible if the customs custody is interrupted by a so-called "inward processing". This process takes a few days, is quite expensive and would exceed the time for free storage.

The corresponding EC Regulation No. 1005/2009 is available on request.

There is no company connection between us and the seller in terms of art. 143 of the Regulation (EEC) Nr. 2454/93.

I assume full liability for the completeness and correctness of all information given by me, in particular I confirm the accuracy of the purchase price.

Should there be any changes concerning the customs value or other circumstances, I undertake to inform you immediately.

I confirm the assumption of all obligations and import duties arising from this power of attorney, including any customs penalties and / or late surcharges.

In the case of a T-1 customs transit procedure I undertake to duly terminate the transit document at the responsible customs office within the specified period.
